The Growing Need for News

The need for news is growing. News is cited by every type of researcher, on every subject, in every type of journal—and in some cases, it's the best or only source of information on a topic. All libraries need a collection of digital news, and giving users access to a broad set of resources is essential.

EXTREMELY IMPORTANT

Faculty state that developing critical thinking skills in students is extremely important.

From a 2018 survey of more than 1,300 faculty and students on the use of varied content in research, teaching, and learning, faculty indicate why they assign primary sources in teaching.

72% of researchers use news today

A 2017 ProQuest study shows that newspapers are a vital tool in research—they're used by 72% of researchers and recommended by 88% of researchers who teach.

Eric T. Meyer, currently the Dean of the School of Information at University of Texas, Austin, and formerly a Professor of Social Informatics and Director of Graduate Studies at Oxford Internet Institute, conducted the data collection and analysis.

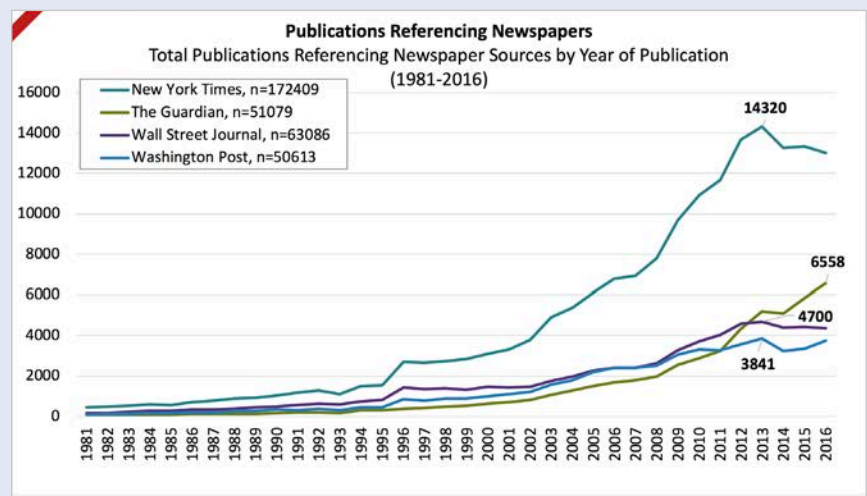

Four newspaper titles were selected for evaluation and analysis in this report:

- The New York Times
- The Wall Street Journal
- The Washington Post
- The Guardian

Scopus was used as the source for the data examined.

Newspapers are on the rise in scholarly research

A 2018 Oxford Internet Institute/ProQuest study found that the use of newspapers in scholarly research is steadily increasing, and reached an all-time high in 2013. For each newspaper analyzed, uses were much higher across disciplines than anticipated—including the social sciences, health and medicine, business and the hard sciences.

Note: 2017 excluded due to partial data still being updated at source showing misleading drop. Peak years for each source labelled with count of publications referencing source.

Give Your Researchers Perspective and Context

Research a topic from every angle, across time and geography. With ProQuest Historical Newspapers, ProQuest Recent Newspapers and ProQuest Global Newsstream—all cross-searchable on the ProQuest platform—researchers access unprecedented coverage of people, places and events from the earliest newspaper publications to current-day reports.

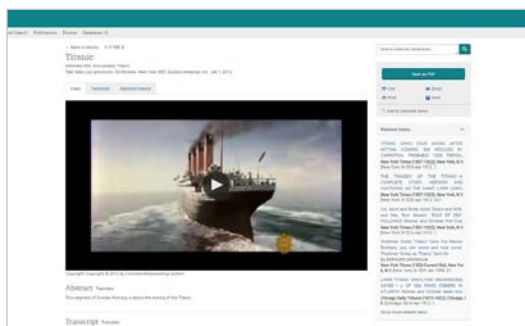

"Titanic Sinks...", New York Times Historical, 16 April 1912 issue

ProQuest Recent Newspapers—a new digital archive to complement Historical Newspapers, providing access to recent news across the world, beginning in the late 2000s to the most recent editions with three-month embargoes.

ProQuest Historical Newspapers—historical archives, from the late 1700s to the early 2000s, explore spans of time across geographies. This is the gold standard in historical news databases, with over 150 historical titles, including regional and local titles and packages to help users go deep into the events and people in their own backyard, and specialty international and topical collections and news content for viewpoints that help fully develop research.

"Fire Helped Doom the Titanic", The New York Times Recent, 4 Jan 2017 issue

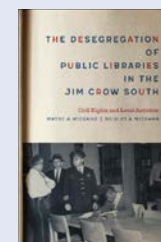

From Global Newsstream Video: "Titanic: Anniversary," 60 Minutes, 1 January 2012

ProQuest Global Newsstream—updated daily, these news sources present trends in life, culture, business, and milestones of all types. Current, full-text news sources including newspapers, newswires, news journals, television and radio transcripts, blogs, podcasts and digital-only websites.

News Uncovers Insights Other Sources Can't

Doctoral candidate Zack Turpin uncovered a series of 19th-century men's fitness articles under the title "Manly Health" by Mose Velsor – the pseudonym of American poet Walt Whitman. A fan of ProQuest Historical Newspapers, Turpin searched "Mose Velsor," and his findings proved illuminating in understanding a critical period in Whitman's career.

Wayne and Shirley Wiegand used ProQuest Historical Newspapers to produce their recent book, The Desegregation of Public Libraries in the Jim Crow South, which tells the story of the integration of southern public libraries.

University of Arizona history professor Matt Delmont launched a 12-month project, Black Quotidian, to highlight everyday moments and lives in African-American history. His site features historical articles from black newspapers such as the Atlanta Daily World, Baltimore Afro-American, Chicago Defender and Philadelphia Tribune. "These newspapers [digitized as part of the ProQuest Black Historical Newspaper collection] are among the most important sources for understanding black history and culture in the twentieth century," he said.

Travel digitally back through time

Historical newspaper content is among the most sought-after primary source material in research. With more than 60 premier stand-alone historical titles dating back to the 1700s, ProQuest Historical Newspapers is the definitive newspaper archive empowering researchers to travel back through centuries and become eyewitnesses to history.

Every issue of each title includes full-page and article images in easily downloadable PDFs. Researchers can study the progression of issues over time through these historical newspaper pages, including articles, photos, advertisements, classified ads, obituaries, editorial cartoons and more. The ProQuest Historical Newspapers archive contains more than 55 million digitized pages.

U.S. Regional Collections

ProQuest Historical Newspapers includes six new regional collections, each featuring the most important titles covering a specific region of the United States:

Midwest | Northeast | North Central | South Central | Southeast | West

U.S. State Collections

Now, 20 new state collections have been created from the Historical Newspaper Regional Collections. Specific states include:

Alabama | California | Delaware | Florida | Indiana | Iowa | Louisiana
Michigan | Mississippi | Montana | New Jersey | New Mexico
New York | North Carolina | Ohio | Pennsylvania | Tennessee
Vermont | Washington | Wisconsin

These collections, many with titles going back hundreds of years, give your users insight into everything from local government decisions to historic moments that may not have been reported anywhere else.

ProQuest Recent Newspapers

Full-image, fully searchable essential recent newspapers

This sought-after archive includes digitized recent editions of more than 70 essential and most-requested newspaper titles. Coverage begins in the late 2000s and goes through the most recent issue, with a three-month embargo.
